YOUR PROBLEMS
by Ann Landers

'Ask Yourself, Why Spare Time . . .

Dear Ann Landers: Our 14-year-old son is driving me crazy. In this state he can get a learner's permit at 15, but he won't be 15 until May. For the last three months he has spent every extra minute in the car — starting, stopping, backing up and going a few feet forward — in the driveway. My husband said the boy used half a tank of gas over the weekend and he didn't go anyplace.

The 14-year-old is highly competitive with his brother who is 16. The 16-year-old is car crazy, too, and it's probable that he'll get a car from his grandmother for his 17th birthday.

He insists the girls will not look at a boy unless he has a car. Furthermore, he has sold his younger brother on the idea that a car is the key to success. In the meantime, their grades are just fair. Please tell us what to do.—BOXED IN

Dear Boxed: The first thing you can do is put the kibosh on Granny's gift. A 17-year-old who is doing just fair in school should not have a car.

Next you can ask yourself why your sons seem to have so much spare time. They should be busy with school work, Scouting, science projects, sports, hobbies — the list is endless.

Boys who are encouraged to channel their time and energy constructively will not be sitting in the driveway by the hour, draining the gas tank.

Dear Ann Landers: I'm a retired farmer, 58 years of age, with a grown family. My wife passed away two years ago. I've taken out a few women, but I was never interested in getting married again until now. I'd marry Dolly in a minute, but one thing is standing in the way. She does not want to get married.

Dolly's husband died four years ago. She is 52 years of age and looks like 35. Dolly says she likes me as a friend but that's as far as it goes.

When I try to hold her hand she says, "Stop that foolishness." Ann, I want this woman. (Continued on Page 26)
